Hannah's practice focuses on elder law, including estate planning, estate and trust administration, guardianships, and estate, trust and guardianship litigation.

With her degree in gerontology, Hannah is well equipped to understand the emotional, physical, and mental aspects of aging in clients. Her empathy and experience also allow her to assist clients with the complexities involved with planning for the future, assisting with a variety of legal and personal issues, such as dealing with the loss of a loved one whilst administering an Estate or amid litigation, and helping families who are dealing with a loved one's incapacity.

Hannah also concentrates her practice on special needs planning and planning for disability and/or long-term care planning, specifically by aiding clients with the planning needed to ensure that they or their loved ones are provided for without being disqualified from receiving government benefits, such as Medical Assistance or Supplemental Security Income (SSI).
