Lucas started his career as a litigator, representing a construction contractor in defense of claims of defective construction. 20 years later, representing companies in the construction industry is still a passion. However, while litigating in the courtroom is still where Lucas feels at home, he gets the most satisfaction from assisting clients with their business and resolving disputes well before litigation is necessary. Lucas builds trust and relationships with his clients by providing advice and guidance through difficult times. Litigation is in many ways about problem solving, and Lucas finds it very rewarding to help his clients find solutions to their problems.

Lucas primarily assists clients involved in construction projects, whether a private job or one for a federal, state, local government or board of education agency. He has experience guiding clients through all aspects of their project, including proposal/bid preparation, contract negotiation, bid protests, procurement activities, performance issues, change orders, claims, warranty issues, insurance coverage questions, payment disputes, terminations up to and through final payment.
